The Fortunate Isles. Who has not heard of the fortunate Isles, Those islands of peace and rest, That lie, as the olden legends tell, to the unknown sea of the west? the has not longed for the apples of gold Which hang from ambrosial boughs? as the not sighed for the nectarous tide That from grove and from mountain flows? Isles of the blest. later sought in the purple west

v a back with awelling sail The storm and the wave defied, ind all day long from dawn to dawn The watch has been bravely kept, The master himself has sat at the helm While the wearled sailor elept. But forever away, eyes andiscovered, the islands by. count blowsoms and boughs of pain are floated out on the tide. Have perched on the vessel's side, simetimes a distant, pearly cloud, Rolf were in the evening light, been the to explicant lips the cry-The Island the Islandare in sight !" A mornent more-struggle longer, O gallant heart be crown shall be won though into igh the vessel which sailed so bravely forth to heavily out on a nameless sex, With pennon drooping and torn. To core ! to core ! are hidden the beautiful shores.

shen heart and flesh shall fail, by similing form, to thy drowning sense, the come this releating male, ugh if descending angels greet Thy spirit's parting breath, and bear thee on to victory Through the portal we call death.

In the fiding lightou shalf sing, " the Isles! the Isles are in sight!" -Selected.
